How to Interview People: Interviewing is Hard!

An interview isn't a conversation.

Bias:

prejudice in favor of (or against) one thing or group
compared to another

How to Interview People:

How to Interview

The 5 Golden Rules of Interviewing

1. Ask open-ended, simple questions
2. Always dig deeper
3. Interrupt and redirect
4. Ask why they ask
5. Use their words

Ask Open-Ended, Simple Questions

Instead of this:

Do you like this?

Try this:

How do you feel about this change?

Always Dig Deeper

Person - “I don’t like this, for obvious reasons.”

Instead of this:

Okay.

Try this:

Like what?

Interrupt and Redirect

*Person - *going on and on and on

Instead of this:

sitting quietly, nodding

Try this:

That reminds me -
I wanted to ask you,
what do you think about _?

Ask Why They Ask

Person - “If I buy this, how long will it take to ship?”

Instead of this:

It will take two weeks.

Try this:

How long do you think it will take to ship?

Use Their Words

Person - “I’m don’t think I get this.”

Instead of this:

What’s confusing you?

Try this:

What don’t you get about it?

General Questions

- What do you think of...
- How do you feel about...
- What is one thing you would change about...
- What would you tell another person about...
- What questions do you have about...
- What's the hardest part about...

What if I want to learn about something specific?

Setting Research Goals

- What product / program decisions will be made based on what I hear?
- What hypotheses / assumptions do I want to challenge?
- What do I want to ask people?

What questions do we answer?

Through our research, we aim to understand:

- What are the problems users are trying to solve? Why?
- What is the context that surrounds the user experience?
- What are the users' mental models (expectations) coming into an experience?
- What can their behavior (not opinions) tell us?

- Task Based
- Time Based

How do we help teams interpret research?

Along the way, we:

- Interpret findings and relate them to past research
- Stay engaged in ongoing conversations with the team
- Provide context and identify opportunities
- Act as a sounding board and user advocate
